IDUNA'S APPLES.

Iduna, the personification of Spring in northern mythology, possessed an unfailing casket of magic apples. These she gave to the heroes of Asgard, when they came to her grove, wearied and worn out with exertions, to make them fresh and young again.

INTRODUCTION.

THE quality of the Royal Academy this year has been a good deal of a surprise. Not only is the general level of the exhibition fully up to the average, but it is better than it has been for some time past. At Burlington House there is plenty of work that can be accepted frankly as representative of the best that our modern school can produce—work that is as sincere in motive as it is thorough in execution. Indeed, a display so adequate in its expression of the many phases of artistic practice is by no means usual. As a rule, we have to be satisfied with Academy exhibitions which only partially illustrate the all-round merit of British art, and balance excellence in one branch of production by downright incompetence in another. If the figure painters are in good trim the landscape men have been prevented by unaccommodating weather, or by some other adverse causes, from doing credit to their reputations. If the portrait painters have been fortunate with their sitters, and inspired by a special run of commissions, other artists are sulking under the smart of lost opportunities, and are hesitating to tempt Fortune when she seems disposed to prove unkind.

But this year some good influence seems to have stimulated equally all ranks of the profession. No one of them is evading its responsibilities, or simply marking time while the others are pushing ahead with vigorous confidence. In all directions the same spirit of activity is perceptible, the same keen ambition to make the best of every chance and to arrive at results worth trying for. As a consequence, the Academy is more than ordinarily authoritative, and far better calculated to appeal to all sorts of art lovers than it has been in other years when all its sensations have been limited to one narrow range of practice, and all its successes have been made by a few men of assured popularity. It has provided a cheerful contradiction to the dismal auguries of the prophets, and has justified itself in a fashion that must be a little shocking to the people who go about agitating against it as a one-sided and obsolete institution concerned only with the perpetuation of a type of art that has no right to existence.

Certainly a very large proportion of what is most creditable to the artistic enterprise of present day workers is at this moment to be found at Burlington House; and most of the men who are active in the advancement of their profession show themselves there to complete advantage. There is great work in portraiture, figure and landscape painting, and sculpture, work that will live in the history of the British school, and mark this last year of the century as one of rare achievement. To decide which branch of practice has the right to claim the first place would be a matter of some difficulty, for each one can show examples that deserve far more than ordinary consideration. If it is the absolute mastery of one or two special pictures that settles the question, plainly it is to the portraits that most honour is due. The astounding brilliancy of Mr. Sargent, the sober mastery of Mr. Orchardson, and the elegant individuality of Mr. Shannon have never been so triumphantly displayed, and never have these three painters stood out so markedly above all the rest of their fellows. But if the decision depends not upon a few superlative performances but upon a number of good and earnest works, then the landscapes can make out an excellent case. There are memorable canvases by Mr. Alfred East, Mr. Mark Fisher, Mr. Alfred Parsons, Mr. David Murray, and Mr. Waterlow, and many other devoted students of nature; and the sum total of ability that these works represent is great enough to be exceptionally impressive. So, too, among the figure pictures, among such things as the contributions of Mr. J. W. Waterhouse, Mr. Abbey, Mr. Gregory, Mr. La Thangue, Mr. Clausen, Mr. Edward Stott, Mr. Frank Dicksee, Mr. Watts, and the Hon. John Collier, sufficient material could be found to emphasise the claim of this section of the art of the year to chief attention.

This telling demonstration of the vitality and energy of the artistic creed that is professed among us at the present time is doubly valuable, not only because it proves how even the most apparently adverse influences cannot diminish the spirit of the men who are capable of doing the best work, but also because it gives the most hopeful suggestion of the developments that may be expected during the new century. In a space of fifty years this country has been raised from a position of æsthetic insignificance, if not of disrepute, to one of authority and honour. If the same rate of progress is continued during the next fifty years, British art in the twentieth century may be without a rival in the world. But perhaps it is safer to say that the way has been prepared for stirring events, and that on the foundation laid by the artists of our own times another generation should be able to build something greater and more remarkable. We have well fulfilled our duty to posterity, and have ended the work of the century with credit and distinction.

Edited by Sir EDWARD J. POYNTER, P.R.A., Director of the National Gallery. Illustrating every Picture in the National Gallery. In Three Vols., £7 7s. the set, net. Vols. I. and II. now ready; Vol. III. ready the end of the year.

"It is a great thing to have so fine and so complete a record of the national pictures as this which Sir Edward Poynter and Mr. Edwin Bale are carrying out between them. For what distinguishes this book from all others of the kind is the fact that every single picture in the Gallery is illustrated in it."—The Times.

"The illustrations are all from half-tone blocks, and are admirably clear. Indeed, we have never seen better specimens of this process. . . . This great work is characteristic of the British nation, for it is the result of private enterprise. When Sir Edward Poynter conceived the idea of an illustrated catalogue to the Gallery he directs, he approached, not the Treasury, but a private firm. Messrs. CASSELL & Co. have obviously spared no trouble and expense in making the catalogue worthy of the collection. Their public spirit will, we do not doubt, be rewarded, for this book is indispensable to every art library in the world, and to every conscientious connoisseur. It would, at the same time, make an excellent gift-book."—Daily News.

(Reduced Facsimile of Cover of "THE LIFE AND TIMES OF QUEEN VICTORIA.")

The DAILY NEWS says:—

"Certainly no happier choice for the task of writing the story of the Queen's life as daughter, wife, mother, and friend could have been made than that of the distinguished authoress who has unhappily not lived to see the publication of this important work. She was, as the prospectus observes, 'herself one of the foremost writers of her Majesty's reign'; and, as all readers of her autobiography are aware, she enjoyed the honour and advantage of personal knowledge of her subject. Her narrative is believed to have been the last production of her busy pen; but her graceful style, tact, feeling, and breadth of sympathy have assuredly nowhere been displayed to more advantage than in the opening chapters, the sixty-four large pages of which carry forward the narrative from the birth of her illustrious heroine down to the early days of her wedded life. The work, which is brightened by a large number of illustrations, will be completed in twenty-nine weekly parts, enclosed in a handsome wrapper."

The MORNING POST says:—

"Mrs. Oliphant's memoir is written with considerable charm of style, and is certain to be appreciated by the public."

By J. MacWhirter, R.A.

With 23 Coloured Plates, beautifully reproduced from Mr. MacWhirter's Original Drawings. Price 5s.

Mr. MacWhirter, R.A., is, without doubt, one of the most eminent living painters of landscape. The book he has prepared is an exposition of his methods of study and work, illustrated by most beautiful examples of his paintings in water-colour. It will probably meet with a very wide appreciation, for not only will it be most helpful to students, but the charm of its reproductions will commend it to all lovers of art.

China Painting.

By Florence Lewis. With 16 Coloured Plates, and a selection of Wood Engravings, with full instructions. 5s.

"It is an excellent guide for the amateur, and a careful study of its pages should hinder a perpetration of many enormities which pass under the name of art."—Morning Post.

Flowers, and How to Paint Them.

By Maud Naftel. With 10 Coloured Plates and Wood Engravings. Cloth, 5s.

"Miss Maud Naftel's 'Flowers, and How to Paint Them,' is one of the best of its kind ever published, and the illustrations are at once useful as examples and charming in themselves. Indeed, if it be possible to learn the art of reproducing an enchanting form of still-life from the natural objects, and without recourse to personal tuition, we should say that this admirably got-up and informing treatise had solved what for so long has appeared to be an insuperable difficulty."—Daily Telegraph.

A Course of Painting in Neutral Tint.

With 24 Plates by R. P. Leitch. With full instructions to the pupil. 5s.

"A valuable addition to the numerous practical works devoted to art instruction. The directions to the student are ample, and the twenty-four plates are admirably varied for the purposes to which they are devoted."—Daily News.

Elementary Flower Painting.

With Eight Coloured Plates and Wood Engravings. Crown 4to, cloth, 3s.

"This is one of a capital series of books on painting in oils and water-colours, and the coloured plates in it are charming pieces of work—in fact, we have seldom seen anything of the kind more exquisitely finished. Each of the pictures represents some flower, and is accompanied by an outline sketch of the same, so that the pupil is aided in correct drawing as well as colouring. The instructions supplied are distinct and practical."—Queen.

A Treatise on the Practice and Theory of Oil Painting. By the Hon. John Collier. Eighth Edition. Cloth, 2s. 6d.
